What are Apprenticeships and how can my business benefit?

Skills shortages are still one of the biggest threats to UK business. Apprenticeships can help businesses to minimise staff turnover and increase productivity by providing on-the-job training, leading to nationally recognised qualifications developed by industry.

Employers do not receive a direct monetary incentive to take on Apprentices, however the off-job training costs are subsidised in full, or in part, by the National Apprenticeship Service (NAS) and the Government contributes to the costs of learning.

The NAS supports, funds and co-ordinates the delivery of Apprenticeships throughout England.

Wealden District Council are pleased to be able to offer waste audits for businesses free of charge. We will visit your business, assess your current waste management practices and produce a bespoke report advising you on how you can waste less and recycle more.

The average business spends 4-5% of its annual turnover on waste management costs. Businesses that take the time to separate their waste from their recycling really can save money as recycling collections are considerably cheaper than just sending it to landfill.

Update: Wealden Tourism Strategy 2010 – 2015 Progress Report

The Strategy was launched on 21 September 2010. It has since been formally adopted by Wealden District Council (WDC), and is now a key objective within the Corporate Plan. A number of tourism businesses have been actively involved in helping to implement the Strategy to date. A Steering Group has been formed which meets bi-annually to monitor progress. The Strategy recommends the implementation of six Quality Programmes. So far, work has been completed to support four of these Programmes – Market Positioning, Visitor Management, Branding and Evaluation. In November 2010, a 'Wealden Marketing Think Piece' Report was presented and the new Wealden Marketing Action Group was formed which first met on 2 February 2011. Terms of Reference were agreed, and some quick wins were requested; these being for WDC to actively promote the 'Countryside 2011' campaign to all tourism businesses, and to focus on populating the Wealden Online Events Calendar to establish key major event information for 2011/12 onwards, to help accommodation providers plan ahead and also provide information to produce Visitor Itineraries.

Also, WDC Officers are in contact with East Sussex County Council (ESCC) on the provision of 'gateway signs', and we are currently advising one Wealden based tourist attraction in the process of obtaining brown signs.

The development of key events is suggested in the Tourism Strategy as a mechanism to attract more overnight stays. The Team is working with a key tourist attraction to help enhance its product portfolio which is currently day visitor focused. This particular attraction is developing a new business model which may create overnight stay opportunities, and therefore help increase the value of tourism to Wealden.

More recently we have been working with our Enjoy Sussex partners (Horsham, Lewes, and Mid-Sussex District Councils) to enhance the Enjoy Sussex website through the addition of bespoke information on our villages and parish attractions. If you haven't taken a peek at www.enjoysussex.info recently, then please take some time to visit the website and enjoy its new look. We have also been working on the collation of the new Enjoy Sussex 2012 Visitor Guide which will be available from January 2012.

The Team worked with Tourism South East to help promote the 2011 UK Open Golf for people with disabilities which took place at the prestigious East Sussex National Golf Club in August 2011. This type of high quality event as recommended in the Tourism Strategy has provided a major business opportunity for our tourism and attraction businesses and provides a first class marketing opportunity for Enjoy Sussex especially in view of promoting the area as a place to visit during London 2012.

Our Land – Experiences to Treasure

Inspire visitors to be passionate about your landscape

Three years ago, nine Protected Area Managers from the Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty (AONB) and National Parks of the South East, met in the rolling chalk downs of the Surrey Hills to discuss ways of promoting and developing sustainable tourism.

With the help of £1million from the Rural Development Programme for England, the Protected Area Managers have now joined up with Brighton-based online travel expert www.responsibletravel.com and the result is Our Land – a new website which will be launched in October 2011 and which will sell local breaks in the High Weald and the other Protected Landscapes. It will list accommodation, attractions and activities alongside stories of the sights, tastes, sounds, and smells that make the High Weald landscapes so special and all of which will help to promote our Wealden tourism businesses.

It is free for businesses to appear on the Our Land website and registration is open to all tourism related businesses in the High Weald AONB that put the landscape at the heart of the tourist experience.

Business Awards scheme planned for Uckfield

The Uckfield Chamber of Commerce is looking forward to 2012 with a proposed new business awards scheme for Uckfield enabling good businesses to be rewarded, which in turn will also provide a boost for their employees.

The awards would be open to some 600 businesses in the TN22 and BN8 postcode areas. The launch is being planned for January 2012 with the awards ceremony probably taking place at the East Sussex National Golf Resort at the end of June, beginning of July.

The costs of organising the awards will be underwritten by selling sponsorship and Neil Edwards of The Marketing Eye, outlined sponsorship packages ranging from Gold at £1,500, through category sponsorship at £500 to smaller packages at £100. Tickets for the event would sell at between £35 and £40 each and the aim would be to bring in £7,500.

The business awards, with a dinner, would raise the profile of the Chamber of Commerce within the town, increase membership and raise the profile of the organisation within Sussex.

Hailsham Town Centre Regeneration

As part of an ongoing initiative to regenerate Hailsham Town Centre and to improve the appearance of the vacant shops in the High Street, Hailsham Town Council recently organised a clean-up day in conjunction with Wealden District Council (WDC) and local residents.

On Saturday 30 July 2011 County, District and Hailsham Town Councillors together with local volunteers set about cleaning up the scruffy interiors of many of the empty and disused shops along the High Street. Several black bags of waste were then removed and disposed of by WDC. All the cleaning equipment for the day was kindly donated by Waitrose and Tesco.

On Saturday 3 September 2011, a series of paintings, drawings and photographs by local artists were installed into the shop fronts transforming the look of the empty shops, brightening up the High Street and providing a platform to showcase the talent of these local artists.

High Risks from Fuel Laundering Plants

'Fuel laundering' is the illegal removal of marker dyes and chemicals from red diesel (agricultural diesel) and kerosene to produce road diesel (DERV). The process requires the use of strong acids and alkalis and can generate a lot of toxic waste.

The Environment Agency and HMRC uncovered high risks to the environment from the activities of the often serious and organised criminals involved in this lucrative trade. As we move to the winter months, and fuel prices rise the activity may increase.

Plants are typically found at remote agricultural buildings or in industrial units. Smaller plants can even operate from an articulated trailer. Farmers and businesses renting out units must be cautious. They may be left with the liability for any toxic waste, if these operations are discovered and suddenly cease.

For a list of indicators of possible fuel laundering visit W: www.wealdenbusinesshelp.org.uk

Call National Customs Hotline on T: 0800 59 5000 to report suspicious activity or the Environment Agency on T: 0800 80 70 60 about pollution issues.

Agency Worker Regulations

The new Agency Worker Regulations came into force on 1 October 2011.

If your organisation hires temporary or casual staff through an agency, as a temporary additional resource or on a more frequent basis then you need to know about these changes.

Agency workers will be entitled to the same basic employment and working conditions, after 12 weeks in a particular job.

These conditions include the same basic hourly pay rate, overtime, shift allowances, unsocial hours' premiums, payments for difficult or dangerous duties, lunch vouchers, bonuses for the quality and quantity of work, rest breaks and annual leave allowance.

Employment Tribunals can impose fines on employers found to have breached the new regulations.

Acas (the Advisory, conciliation and arbitration service) has issued guidance on the Agency Worker Regulations and what the changes will mean for employers.

Please visit the Acas website for more information, or call the helpline on T: 08457474747.

Red Tape Challenge

Government is giving businesses the chance to help rip up some of the 21,000 rules and regulations that are getting in their way.

Some of the regulations affect many business sectors, from rules on health and safety to those on employment.

They are inviting comments on six general regulation themes throughout the Red Tape Challenge process: Health and Safety, Environment, Equalities, Pensions, Company and Commercial Law, and Employment Related Law.

The Ratings are up!

Wealden is now part of the National Food Hygiene Rating Scheme, which means that consumers, and businesses, can easily find out if a restaurant, takeaway or food retailer in Wealden, has good food hygiene standards.

When consumers eat out or shop for food, they might see a sticker in the window or on the door, or a certificate on display, showing the hygiene rating for that business. Businesses are encouraged to display these stickers and certificates at their premises, in a place where you can easily see them when you visit. Nothing on display leads consumers to draw their own conclusions.

The food hygiene rating given to a business reflects the standards of food hygiene found on the date of inspection or visit by our officers.

To check ratings visit W: www.food.gov.uk or W: www.wealdenbusinesshelp.org.uk if you want to improve the rating for your business, or just to find out more.

Gas explosion from pub oven

Officers recently investigated a gas explosion at a local public house. This turned out to be a flame throw back when the injured person attempted to light the oven, resulting in burns to his arms and legs. A gas engineer called by the pub, disconnected the gas supply (portable LPG cylinders) and the fire service secured the doors of the oven. The staff had to close the kitchen. Investigations are still underway to establish the cause of the incident.

The oven was only 4 years old and the equipment had a gas safety interlock system fitted. However there were no manufacturers instructions on site on how to light the oven and there were no details of any service or maintenance history.

The pub had no gas safe certificate. Therefore, as officers could not rule out the risk of further explosions, they served a Prohibition Notice under HASAW Act and Gas Safety Regulations.

This prohibited the use of the oven until it was certified safe. Food business operators have a general duty under the Health and Safety at Work etc Act 1974 to get their gas cookers or appliances inspected and certified regularly, preferably annually.

Officers from the Public Protection Team will be asking for copies of gas certificates when they carry out routine inspections in future.

Whole King Scallops . . . ensure they are safe

Shellfish such as scallops can accumulate toxins from naturally occurring marine algae that, when consumed, are capable of causing severe illness in humans. One of the main concerns relates specifically to Amnesic Shellfish Poisoning (ASP). There have been recent incidents identified, where whole King Scallops from UK waters have had to be withdrawn from the market, both in the UK and in Europe, due to contamination with ASP toxins above the regulatory limit.

The toxins are not eliminated by cooking. There is no known antidote for ASP toxins and poisoning can have serious consequences.

During much of the year, there is a significant trade in whole scallops, and products are being traded that may pose a risk to public health. However, the practice of 'shucking', where the viscera are removed, will in most cases be capable of reducing levels of toxins to the required levels. However proper shucking, is a skilled process that includes a product rinsing stage. Shucked product is normally supplied separated from the shell, but it is possible to leave the edible parts of a shucked scallop attached to a half-shell.

Caterers and retailers can ensure compliance by purchasing from approved establishments which can supply an identification mark, inside an oval border. Caterers and retailers purchasing small quantities of locally landed whole scallops directly from the fisherman, not from approved establishments, will need to have in place documented food safety management procedures that prove that the product they sell to consumers does not contain the toxin at dangerous levels. Generally this is only confirmed by product testing.

Further information is available from W: www.food.gov.uk or W: www.wealdenbusinesshelp.org.uk or by contacting Wealden's Public Protection Team on T: 01323 443555.

Guidance to end confusing date labels

The Food Standards Agency (FSA) and Defra have recently published new guidance to help the food industry decide whether their products require a 'use by' or 'best before' date. Under the new voluntary guidelines, food packaging should only use either 'use by' or 'best before' date labels to make it easier for shoppers to know when food is at its best and how long it is safe to eat.

Best before dates relate to food quality, including taste, texture and appearance. Eating food past its 'best before' date is unlikely to be harmful.

Use by dates are the most important date for people to consider, as these relate to food safety.

While it is an offence to sell food after the 'use by' date, retailers can, with the exception of eggs, sell products after the 'best before' date, providing it is safe to eat. Eggs have a 'best before' date, but should not be eaten after the date shown on the label.

Retailers often use 'sell by' and 'display until' dates on their shelves, but these are not required by law and are used mainly for stock control purposes. The FSA always emphasises that 'use by' dates are the most important, as these relate to food safety.

The guidance can be found on the FSAgency website:

Shocking content of nation's favourite takeaways

A study into two of the nation's favourite takeaways has revealed shocking levels of fat, salt, sugar and colourings along with bogus meat and potentially lethal nuts.

Council analysis of Indian takeaways found one portion of chicken tikka masala and pilau rice contained 116 per cent of a person's Guideline Daily Amount (GDA) of saturated fat and 92 per cent of salt. A similar investigation into Chinese takeaways discovered sweet and sour chicken with fried rice contained 119 per cent GDA of salt and 16 teaspoons of sugar, 75 per cent GDA.

The Local Government Group study, which analysed food from 223 takeaways across England and Wales, also found illegally high levels of certain colourings which the Food Standards Agency has called for a voluntary ban on because of their negative affects on children. If these were pre-packaged meals they would have to carry a health warning advising consumers that they contained these colourings, regardless of amount.

Particularly worrying was that in some of the tikka masala test buys it was stressed that the customer had a nut allergy. Despite this, one in five of these takeaways contained peanuts or almonds. Just a small amount of nuts can be fatal for someone with a severe allergy.

On two occasions the meat found in sweet and sour chicken meals was in fact turkey. Cllr Paul Bettison, Chairman of the LG Regulation Board, said:

“The family takeaway is like a tradition in homes across the country, be it celebrating the end of a working week or settling down for Saturday night television. Everyone knows they often aren't especially healthy and should be enjoyed in moderation, but that just one meal can contain so much fat, salt and sugar is truly shocking and unnecessary.

“There's no excuse for illegal amounts of colouring and as for secretly using a cheaper type of meat, that's just shamefully ripping off customers. And including nuts when you've been told a person suffers from a nut allergy is unforgivable, it could potentially kill them.

Research like this helps people make informed decisions about the food they eat and will hopefully inspire takeaways to follow the lead taken in other parts of the food industry and make their product more healthy. There are many ways to make takeaways more healthy such as using lower fat oils, natural colourings and reducing salt.

Farmers Markets update

The Wealden Farmers' Markets' Co-ordinators' Group has been working in partnership with Wealden District Council and The Plunkett Foundation to carry out health check surveys of Crowborough, Hailsham, Heathfield and Uckfield markets, which have been funded by The Big Lottery 'Making Local Food Work' programme www.makinglocalfoodwork.co.uk. The survey found that customers wanted to see more choice of local products. To offer more choice the markets need more buyers and sellers. It was therefore decided by the Group that a new marketing campaign was required. As a first step, the Group applied for a Wealden Rural Retailers grant and was successful in being awarded funds to help them design and print some vibrant and welcoming banners, posters and road signs. Look out for these new signs and pay a visit to your local market where you can enjoy sampling the local produce for sale. Visit www.wealden.gov.uk for market dates and times.
